Dear Cousin:

Thank you for your recent letter. I am returning the material you sent me, and a couple of things I think will interest you. The article from the Yorkville Inquirer of 1870 was written by "an octogenarian" who heard Rev. Joseph Alexander preach when he was a boy, and also seems to be well acquainted with Rev. Joseph's son-in-law, the Rev. Robert Walker.

I'm also including abstracts of some of the York County Court of Equity law suits against Dr. Samuel D. Alexander. I have photocopies of all the cases involving him if you have questions or want a copy.

I quite agree that Samuel Davis or Samuel Davies was the father- in law of the Rev. Joseph Alexander. I have found deeds and grants both in Charlotte Co., VA and in Anson and Mecklinburg NC under both Davis and Davies, and some spell the name both ways in the same document. One deed dated 26 Dec. 1774 is from Joseph Alexander, Minister of the Gospel, of Mecklinburg, to Samuel Davies, joiner, of same, for L. 20, 50 ac. conv. to Alexander 20 July 1769. (Deed Book 9, p. 231-233). This is probably from Joseph to his father-in-law as he was about to leave for York Co., SC.

Again, thanks for the letter and all the information, and I hope this will help you.

hundred miles from the Pee Dee to the court at Bladen, on the banks of Cape Fear. Pee Dee residents complained before His Majesty's Council at New Bern that the courts, much needed because of law-lessness and general business, were inaccessible. Roads were little more than Indian paths, and swollen streams made travel hazardous much of the year.

An example of the hardships of Bladen tithables living on the frontier is found in the account of a murder that took place in 1748 where the city of Charlotte now stands. It took three days for a messenger to ride to the courthouse on the Cape Fear a little above present Elizabethtown and three more days for a deputy to get to the murder scene. Three additional days were required to take the culprit to the Bladen jail, nine days in all.

Local residents drew up a petition, asking Royal Governor Gabriel Johnston, serving for His Majesty George II, to establish a separate county along the Pee Dee. A second group dissented on this point, stating that the poverty and paucity of the inhabitants did not warrant such action.

The petition from the committee seeking a new county was presented at the Council in New Bern on December 28, 1748. Present were His Excellency Gabriel Johnston, the governor, The Honorable Nath. Rice, Robert Halton, Edward Moseley, Roger Moore and Will Forbes, Members of the Council.

In favor of dividing the county were Captain Samuel Davis, Charles Robinson and Thomas Smith, who exhibited the petition on behalf of themselves and sundry other inhabitants. The petition pointed out the great distance to the court at Bladen, "the badness" of the routes, and the consequent exclusion of Pee Dee citizens from the benefits of said court. They asked for the division of the county, arguing that while there were few inhabitants along the Pee Dee at present, they would increase to a competent number.

A petition against the establishment of a new county was also presented, highlighting "the poverty and paucity of the inhabitants." Surprisingly, it was delivered by the same group favoring the new county and was in the same handwriting as the other. Names of dissenters are not listed in The Colonial Records reporting the action.

After the reading of both petitions, Governor Johnston was pleased to query the committee asking for a new county. He agreed that the distance of over one hundred miles to the court and the conditions for travel at certain seasons of the year caused hardships for the settlers. He also wished to promote settlement along the Pee Dee. Taking proper action with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Council, the governor granted the petition to create a new county from Bladen.

Anson County, St. George's Parish, was of enormous proportion when first formed from Bladen. Stretching westward to the Mississippi, this gargantuan frontier county included the present state of Tennessee. South Carolina bordered it on the south. Years of wrangling would take place before a satisfactory agreement would be reached over its boundaries.

Other counties would be cut on her east line between the Pee Dee, Drowning Creek and Lumber River. Granville's Line would separate Anson from Virginia to the north until near the end of 1779. However, the first North Carolina-Virginia boundary as set by William Byrd's survey in 1728 remained far more stable than the county's southern boundaries.

Controversy went on for a number of years as to the exact date of Anson County's legal establishment, but the late D. L. Corbitt, the late Dr. A. R. Newsome and his collaborator, Dr. Hugh Talmage Lefler settled on the year 1750 in their respective scholarly works. A check of Journals for the Assembly of 1748–49–50 proves that the bill did not complete its passage and gain the required assent of the Royal Governor until April 9, 1750. During the time of preparation for the county's bicentennial observance, older citizens held to the date of 1749. Bicentennial events were held October 2–7, 1949. However, the late D. L. Corbitt, then a member of the State Department of Archives and History staff, informed this writer at the time that the legal date was 1750. This fact was included in a pageant written by the author for the bicentennial celebration.

Corbitt, author-compiler of the book, Formation of North Carolina Counties 1663–1943, stated that the governor and his council created Anson County on September 29, 1748 and named justices of the peace for the county the next day: Joseph White, Charles Robinson, Edmund Cartledge, William Phillips, Samuel Davis, Thomas Smith, John Hicks, and John Holmes. Joseph White acted as sheriff until a commission was empowered to name John Hamer first official Sheriff of Anson County.

The Council at New Bern in conjunction with the governor recommended that a court house site be chosen at the ford of Rocky River.
