1. MCGREGOR, Marjorie. A McGregor Saga, 1850-1948, May 1978 (For Private Circulation Only).

New Zealand emigrant family history; limited dates.

“I can only remember an old man with a grey beard sitting in an armchair in front of the fire. He wore felt boots and he was blind”. That was the reply I received from my nephew when I asked him what he remembered about his grandfather. It is so negative and such a complete contrast to the virile man Malcolm John McGregor was, that I, his daughter, would like to pass on something of the romance, grit and sheer determination that marked the lives of the Red McGregors in those pioneering days.

Alexander (est bc1768) and Ann (est bc1790) McGregor, Malcom John's grandparents, lived at Ullapool, Wester Ross. They were in charge of the Government Hostelry there. They had five sons and two daughters (born c1816-1830): 1) Ian, 2) William, 3) Alpin, 4) Malcolm, 5) Alexander, 6) Bessie and 7) Ann. Alexander (1818-1886) married Isabella McGregor (1816-1907) and they emigrated to New Zealand in 1851.

2. KEDDIE, John W. Rev. James MacGregor, D.D (1830-1894). Profile of a forgotten Christian theologian and apologete (being a brief biographical sketch, including a critique of his Apologetic method and an extended summary of his Calvinistic views). London, 1973.

James MacGregor was one of twin sons born 6 Jan 1830 in the little cross-street of Callander, Perthshire, to Duncan MacGregor, a builder by trade, and his wife Helen MacPherson. Summarised in The Quaich, August 1992, vol.3, no.11, p.88. John Ward has more information on this family, which had relations in Doune.
